HUTCHINSON'S CEMETERY.

This beautiful location, was designed for the purpose of a cemetery by John Hutchinson. The plat, which contains five acres, was purchased of N. A. Ware, in June, 1841. The grounds contain seven hundred lots—sixteen feet long by twelve wide—with suitable streets and alleys, for convenient access to every part of them.

It has now become quite a city of the dead, being tenanted by some thousands of the once inhabitants of Springfield.

Business Directory Springfield, Illinois 1860

Editor's Note: This Springfield business directory has been made from a voluminous work titled Illinois State Business Directory 1860 compiled by Smith & Du Moulin of Chicago and published by J. C. W. Bailey & Co., publishers, 88 Dearborn Street. The original price of the book was $5.00.

In 1860, a banner year in Lincoln's life, Springfield had a population of 9,320. It was the capital of the State but like most seats of government was far from being self-sufficient. For example, the state directory reveals that in this small town there was little manufacturing, hardly any heavy hardware and machinists' supplies available from local dealers, practically no basic hard goods and bulk by-products from packing houses; and vehicles, boats, sporting goods, ornamental works and art novelties were unavailable to Springfield residents who likely procured such goods in Chicago.

One of the most puzzling aspects in the making of this compilation is that no Springfield blacksmiths are listed in the directory. Perhaps they preferred to be called coach and carriage makers. Springfield also has no bootleggers, awning makers, bell hangers, birdcage manufacturers, boat builders, boiler-makers, bridge builders, cabinet makers, diamond mounters, engravers, lithographers, map publishers, steam fitters, taxidermists, wig and toupee makers, nor any dealers in Yankee notions — to name a few of the town's business and professional limitations.

Perhaps this business directory will be of interest to our readers, because the people listed here were friends, neighbors and business associates of the Lincolns. To be sure, the Lincolns were not acquainted with the entire population of the city, and they did not patronize each and every business and professional person listed, but they likely knew of their existence and that their services were available when or if they were needed. On the other hand, in all probability, the entire list of business and professional people in this directory either knew Lincoln personally or had heard of him by reputation.

The Theatre takes pleasure in introducing to his friends and acquaintances a new and interesting scene from Metropolitan Block, to the spacious store, recently erected by him at No. 107, Broadway. This is the most complete, extensive and commodious Gallery of paintings ever opened in New York; and the right and appropriate place for making pictures has been built by him. It will contain more than five hundred pictures, and he will be able to produce better pictures.

Full page advertisement (opposite page 614) of Alexander Hesler's Chicago photographic studio in Smith & Du Moulin's Illinois State Business Directory, 1860. Hesler is credited with making five photographs of Abraham Lincoln during two sittings in Chicago and Springfield. They are classified as 0-2 (Chicago, Illinois), 0-26, 0-27, 0-28 and 0-20 (Springfield, Illinois). No record can be found that Lincoln ever visited Hesler's new location at 113 Lake Street.
